The Helpful Bluebird

Long ago, a little bluebird lived in a tall tree near a Native American village. Every morning, the bird sang a cheerful song as the sun rose. The children smiled when they heard the happy music.

One day, strong winds blew through the forest. Leaves and small branches covered the walking path. The children wanted to visit the river, but the path was messy.

The bluebird flew from tree to tree, singing loudly. The song reminded everyone to work together. Soon, the children and their families picked up the branches and leaves. Before long, the path was clean again.

That evening, everyone thanked the bluebird for its cheerful song and for reminding them that helping each other makes a community strong.
