

Name:

Date:

Life in a Native American Village

Long ago, Native American tribes lived all across North America. Each tribe had its own language, customs, and way of life. Some tribes lived in forests, while others lived on plains, deserts, or near rivers. Families worked together to build homes, gather food, and care for their communities.

Many Native Americans hunted animals, fished in rivers, and grew crops such as corn, beans, and squash. Children learned important skills from their parents and elders. They listened to stories, helped with daily tasks, and learned about their tribe's traditions. Today, Native American tribes continue to celebrate and share their cultures.

Questions:

1. Where did Native American tribes live?

2. Did all tribes have the same language and customs?

3. Name one way Native Americans got food.

4. Who taught children important skills and traditions?

5. What do Native American tribes continue to do today?