The Secret Snow Fort

The morning sun shone bright, but the air outside was crisp and freezing.
Overnight, a thick blanket of fluffy snow had covered the neighborhood.
Leo zipped up his heavy winter coat, pulled his wool beanie down over his ears, and put on his waterproof gloves.
It was the perfect snow day.

Leo stepped outside, his boots making a loud crunch in the fresh snow.
His goal for the day was to build the ultimate snow fort in his backyard.
He began by rolling small snowballs across the lawn, watching them grow bigger and heavier with every turn.
Soon, he had several large snow blocks ready to stack.

After an hour of careful building, Leo smoothed out the walls and carved a low doorway in the front.
Just as he finished his masterpiece, his sister Maya walked into the yard carrying a thermos.

"I brought warm hot chocolate with extra marshmallows!" Maya said, holding out a mug.

Leo smiled and gestured toward his creation. "Welcome to the secret fort," he replied.
The two of them squeezed inside the cozy shelter, sipping their warm drink and watching tiny snowflakes begin to fall again outside.
